FORDHAM FACULTY UNITED/SEIU LOCAL 200 UNITED OPEN LETTER TO THE FORDHAM UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY

We, members and supporters of the Fordham University community, call on the Fordham administration to live up to its values of human dignity for all persons in the ongoing collective bargaining negotiations with Fordham Faculty United by addressing the three priorities of higher compensation, a health benefit for adjunct faculty, and pay parity across all its schools — goals that aim to remedy inequities found throughout higher education, including at Fordham.

1. Higher pay alleviates economic hardship for the most vulnerable faculty in the Fordham community, many of whom now must work several jobs just to make ends meet. Increasing wages for FFU members ensures that students are given the due care and attention of a Fordham education.
2. A health benefit for part-time faculty, on whom Fordham relies for instruction, particularly for students in their first and second years, is a necessity in the United States, where most workers depend on employer-sponsored insurance for their health coverage.
3. Finally, social justice calls for pay parity at the university. Adjunct faculty in Fordham's schools of social work and religious education currently earn far lower pay per course than adjuncts in all the other schools. Paying less to those in the care professions perpetuates systemic gender and racial inequalities, for at Fordham, as elsewhere, women predominate in the social work and education fields, and the GSSS faculty serves the most racially diverse group of students at the university.

The negotiations between FFU and the university are taking place in the aftermath of the devastating COVID-19 pandemic, which has exacerbated structural problems in our society, including conditions of precarity and undercompensation for work in a vast range of fields, academia chief among them. Workers now face an inflationary economic environment, with cost-of-living increases at historically high rates, particularly in the New York City area, as seen in skyrocketing rises in rent. The university cannot negotiate as if these major shifts in the landscape have not occurred, or as if all parts of the university's workforce have sacrificed equally. Teaching and caring for students has never been more challenging than under these conditions, for not only has the pandemic directly impacted contingent faculty, it has also affected our students, who often turn to their instructors with problems beyond the scope of the classroom.

We therefore believe that Fordham University should match its reputation as a prestigious Catholic university and meet the call of its Jesuit values, namely to promote social justice and care for all persons and to reflect upon and address structural injustice within itself first, by reaching an agreement with its contingent faculty for better pay, a health benefit for adjunct instructors, and pay parity across schools. To do this is to respect their commitment to students and contribution to the life and work of the university. Since faculty working conditions are students’ learning conditions, a fairer contract for Fordham’s teaching faculty benefits the entire Fordham community.

Sincerely,

FFU Members
